 Vs. Background Image

background.gif

- and background images:
 - An element is used to include an image that has a more substantial role in the page, like a photo or a logo
 - A background image is pure presentation, and the only reason you would use a background-image is to improve the attractiveness of an element.
- We could have just placed the image inside the paragraph, and we could probably get the same look and feel, but the guarantee star is pure decoration
- It has no real meaning on the page and it's only meant to make the element look better. So, background-image makes more sense.

- By default, background images are repeated.
- The no-repeat value for the background-repeat property turns this off, so we get just one image.
- By default, browsers position a background image in the top, left of the element

Using Divs to define Regions of a Page

To achieve this we could do the following:

- Use DIV elements as sections
- Allocate class or id to each of these divs
- Create CSS rules for each DIV to define positioning
